What's new in Silence Channel:

...or the No Show One of the best parts of mystery writing is being woken up in the middle of the night, being bounced around, set down, and then going back to sleep after the author mentions a certain name. It's like a wonderful, enigmatic gift. Like waking up to find an old friend sitting at the table with your breakfast. "Cape Cod Café. 8:25 AM." And you're happy. "Oh, that's him. That's John Goodman!" And then some of you people are like "WTF?!?" and some of you guys are like "WHAT?", and then still others who actually know that John Goodman is alive and a dear friend of yours who is from Louisville, KY, start discussing how he just might be appearing in person in a few months or weeks or hours. At that moment, another cup of sweet, strong coffee hits your lips. And you step in, gently take away the litter from the table, and ask for details. Where is he apparently going to be? At what hospital? At what bed? Who is he staying with? Who is he visiting? "William and Mary Hospital. He's not in the ICU. He's in the Surgical Ward. He's been in that bed - I don't know, four days." For his arrival. That he hasn't showed up already. He's probably just crashing for a day or two, probably not eating, and then he'll be out the front door before you know it. "Do you believe in signs?" you ask. "No," she says. "But what are you going to tell him?..." "Just...wait and see." Well, dammit. You knew you'd have to manage the disappointment if John Goodman didn't show up for his visit that was supposed to be today. You've kind of made yourself a deal. You did mention that you're up and having breakfast with him, but you didn't say what time he was supposed to arrive. "I'm not going to say anything about the time you're supposed to come," you'd say, "Just enjoy being here."
